JASK is Built for Speed

Attack surfaces are expanding. The perimeters of growing companies continuously shift. And the pace of new weaponization is unrelenting. In this environment, efficacy depends on speed. But traditional security operations technology is a speed barrier. Heavy and difficult to change, it delivers more noise than signal, overwhelming analyst resources and clogging security operations. Enter JASK.

Attackers Are Agile. Why Isn't the SOC?

Every day, sometimes every hour, holds a new test for security teams. Cyber criminals rapidly evolve strategies and techniques, innovating, testing-and-weaponizing-continuously. Collectively, far more threats are hitting organizations than there are analysts to fight them. This is what we set out to solve. Everything we do is focused on supporting analysts in achieving their highest possible level of speed, leverage, and precision in their fight against exposure.

We Are In This Together

We know that the challenge and urgency of battle today is far too great for any one player to take on alone. This is why we built JASK on open source, so that you can evolve the solution to reflect your own expertise. To work with existing technologies, helping teams access more value from these investments. Why we created The Hive, a first-of-its-kind private collaboration center for top security teams to share knowledge and strategies. Why every JASK employee invests time on the road educating the security community on what we've found to be most effective.

JASK

> "We knew exponentially more was possible. We have a long history of pushing the edge of what's possible in security-centered AI. We knew it would take a dramatic shift in thinking to give security teams the same agility we see from attackers. That is why we designed JASK, to work differently than anything seen before in security operations."
